

Horse Syndication Explained

Syndication has become increasingly important throughout equestrian sports & allows riders to obtain and maintain the ride on horses they would otherwise be unable to have in their barns. Additionally, it creates an exciting opportunity for those interested in horse ownership to own top horses and experience the thrill of being an owner without the responsibility or financial burden of sole ownership.

What is syndication?

Horse ownership syndication is when a group of people come together to purchase shares in a promising horse for a professional rider. These shares not only cover the actual cost to buy the horse, but the annual costs needed to maintain the horse. For example, if you are joining a horse ownership syndication which offers 10 shares, then you and 9 other people will own that horse and help maintain the costs of your horse on an annual basis.

Buy In:

This is the one-time amount you pay to purchase your share of the horse. This amount can vary widely depending on level of training, potential, & competitive success of the horse.

Annual Maintenance:

This is the annual cost you contribute to keep your horse going. The annual maintenance cost helps cover lessons and training, competition entry costs, monthly boarding, shoeing, equipment, tack, veterinary care, insurance, and shipping to showing. This cost will vary based on the competition level of the horse and rider. This cost is split equally among the syndication members.
